My Sister

MY SISTER By Janice Veldman

She came bringing her presence
light when I no longer
could open my eyes
she knew not to bring flowers for they all die
leaving a stench
filling the room
with the unwanted smell of death

she came in the winter
when it was cold
she brought a bulb
taking her time
she gently
planted the bulb
deep within the soil of my heart leaving with it the hope of spring when it would bloom
bringing a scent
reminding me of her presence

she sat next to me
quietly spoke
when I no longer could speak said thank you
when I uttered a few grunts for she knew me well understanding what I said took my hand gently squeezed it though I could not squeeze hers bringing me comfort when I no longer could find it on my own

she had to leave of course, they all have to leave but when she left she left something behind the lingering gift of presence > who but her could do such a thing only one my sister
